There is much to suggest that the version communicated everywhere after transcription is incomplete, because after bar 57, the last tone of which the bass part controls the passage to the dominant, which, however, does not appear, but immediately leads to the tonic, which is more technically correct Continuation required. The subsequent closing measures also indicate missing measures with the scale of the right hand leading downwards twice, analogous to the three-tone sequence before the repeat symbol in the first part. My supplementary attempt (to get over double dominant and dominant fourth chord, as well as the passage transposed from bar 13 and leading to the final tonic, now transposed) is characterized in this version by the frame box at the end, so that the additional bars 58 - 61 without any problems can be skipped to view the traditional version.
