Shiny-O

(Halyard Shanty)

Captain, captain, you are a dandy
Way-ay-ay-ay, shiny-o
Captain, captain, you love your brandy
Way-ay-ay-ay, shiny-o

Won't you ferry me over to Dover
Won't you ferry me over to Dover

Queenstown to Dover's a hundred miles or over
Queenstown to Dover's a hundred miles or over

Captain, captain, how deep is the water?
It measures one inch, six feet and a quarter

For her I'm sailing across this water

Rivers, rivers, rivers are a-rolling
Rivers are a-rolling and I can't get over

Hens and chickens are a'flying over
When she pitches she pitches into Dover

The boat, the boat she is a bleedin' rollin
Oh get to Dover before me head is stove-in

Captain, captain can I stop this pumpin'
I'd even take a turn on the capstan

Captain, captain, you are a dandy
Captain, captain, you love your brandy

Shiny-O - Actually, women were taboo on the old sailing ships. But sometimes the captains made exceptions and took their wives or daughters on board. Of course, the starving sailors were quickly smitten and jealousies often arose between them. This was also the reason why the men should keep to themselves. In this halyard shanty, a passenger is the one in love.
